The College Journal-Amy Lynn Hess 2019-07-19 Keeping track of life during college is hard, but writing things down can make it a bit easier. The hard part for students is often establishing a writing habit, knowing what to write down and how often. What makes this journal easy to use is that it is pre-planned and divided into three categories: Academic Calendar, Weekly Review, and Dailies. It includes fill-in-the-blank pages with prompts and templates intended to raise self awareness, help students take financial responsibility, and help them stay on top of tasks, deadlines, meetings, and assignments. After completing the initial set-up of the semester's dates, a student might spend between 10 and 30 minutes on journal entries each day, depending on the depth to which the journal is used, how personalized and colorful the student wants to make it, and how exactly the student wants to keep track of time, habits, and finances.
